THE JAPANESE IN WASHINGTON. They rise in the morning between five and six, when they commence their ablutions, having first scraped their tongues with a white cinnamon scented stick, about six inches long, sharpened like the keel of a toy eal on the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, boat on one side. This they also, by a sharp rubbing between the palms of the hands, unraval at the ends, so as to form a tuft with which they rub their teeth, using also for the latter a light pink powder, which is about equally tasteless and scentless. This they keep in small round wooden boxes, which are placed near their pieces of na ive soap on the respective wooden washstands, one, two or three of which latter are allowed to each bedroom, according as the number of occupants varies from seven downward .-They next fill their small brass headed, cone barrelled, brass mouth-pieced pipes, that hold a few grains weight only of their tobacco. which very much resembles the Turkish both in flavor, fibre and color, and having filled them, they strike the small pieces of flint and steel which they all carry suspended by cords from their side, and European from the life of Frederick Christopher Porthes, by looking "ta-bak-a" pouches, and so produce a spark which ignites a piece of prepared cotton, held between the fingers for the purpose, from which they light their pipes in the ordinary way. If, however, one man on filling his pipe sees another smoking, he obtains a light from him by bringing the head of his own pipe in contact with the other. and taking a long draw to assist the ignition. At seven o'clock they breakfast; the highest in rank taking their meals in a room separate from the rest; the intermediate officers in the large dining or "tea room," and a few of the lowest class in the kitchen. They all live pretty much alike, high and low, and never > nativity. At breakfast each one invariably eats three or four hard boiled eggs, some plain boiled rice, bread and butter and tea. the latter both sugared and milked. To these are sometimes added a slice of boiled ham and a glass of cold water or milk.

At twelve o'clock they dine, the meal consisting of rice, chicken salad, boiled ham, hard boiled eggs, fresh fish, champagne and American ale. Of the last named beverage, some of them will drink two or three glasses, and they all appear to like it. They have both the champagne and ale ad libitum. At seven o'clock they have tea, their third and last meal. It consists of "the cup which cheers but not intoxicates," and of which they partake only twice a day, preserved fruits, an assortment of fancy cakes, a glass of cold milk and hard boiled eggs-the latter they eat to the number of three or four each, as before stated, at every meal. They are not partial to potatoes or green vegetables. and they never eat beef or mutton, vealor lamb. Those who mess in the "tea room" are waited on by the hotel waiters, and they sit and eat like Christians. On the first night of their arrival, they were, I think, awed by the presence of one of the Naval Commissioners, then a stranger to them, who sat at the head of the table; but now, when left to themselves, they converse and crack jokes as gaily as ever they did in their lives.

At ten, or soon afterwards, they retire to their own rooms and lie about in disorder until morning. One recreant, however, on Monday night went into a drug store next door to the hotel, and drank effervesing fluids till near midnight, and then sent for brandy. which, I am sorry to say, he got, after which he went to bed, not with a brick in his hat, for he never wears one, but with an equivalent weight elsewhere .- N. APPEARANCE OF THE HEAVENS .- The Northwestern sky last evening was rendered very brilliant by the proximity of the moon, the two stars, Castor and Pollux, of the first magnitude, and the bright planets Venus and Jupiter, and Saturn although more distant. was within 25 degrees-a juxtaposition of rare occurrance. Venus is now at the point of its greatest brillliancy; so that it can be seen at any time during a clear day, with the aid of an opera glass, and by many persons, without. Its light is indeed now so strong, that it casts visible shadows after the evening twilight has disappeared. The motion of the planet and of Jupiter during the next six weeks, in their race towards the sun, will be quite interesting. For a month or two the planets have evidently been approaching each other; they will continue to do so until the evening of May 31st, when Jupiter will pass Venus about two degrees to the South, and will be six degrees west of it on the 20th of June; on that day the apparent motion of Venus towards the sun becomes more rapid than that of Jupiter, so that the former will overtake and pass the latter again (but this time Jupiter will lehem, 25c.; Maddie and Sollie, a sequel to Little | be to the North) on the 7th of July, and will come into a line with the sun on July 18th (the day of the Solar eclipse), 11 days earlier
